In an ideal world…

… compilers do a perfect job:

- they find the global optimum of the preferred metric(s):
  - performance
  - code size
  - energy, etc.
  - combinations of the above
- they are bug-free
- they preserve all necessary debug/traceability information
- they run fast

(and compiler engineers are out of their jobs)